

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

To cool an automotive drive system mounted in the rear of the vehicle, air inlet openings are provided in the covering panel part of the undercarriage, creating through the influx of air a cold air layer zone around the transmission and the bottom of the engine, displacing a hot air layer zone of the engine, which is layered above the cold air, outward through air outlets.